The opening of Sensations

Matt, Jay, and I checked out the grand opening of Sensations last night. The protesters were there in spades sporting some nice signs. There were supporters there too, which was nice to see. We waited outside in line for about 20 minutes. I'm sure they made us wait just so the news crews would not just be filming protesters because it wasn't that crowded inside.

I had never been inside any of the other incarnations of this bar (Crazy Horse, Little Nashville), but it was nicer inside than Ralph's. I hope it does well. There were more people around in that area of town than I had ever seen before. I can't help but think the bar will be good for surrounding businesses.
